

What is a Managed Services Provider (MSP)?

Healthcare Staffing without an MSP

Surrounded by a universe of staffing agencies, a healthcare facility deals with different contacts, contracts, invoices, and processes. Staffing agencies may be finding clinicians, but they're not working in concert. While some administrative tasks such as pre-screening, interviewing, and managing compliance are handled by agencies, too often the burden falls onto the facility's staff. As you can see, hiring and managing a workforce can easily become overwhelming.

How Does an MSP Work?

A healthcare facility communicates their needs to an MSP, who works with hundreds of staffing agencies within their network to address their challenges. The MSP shares requirements, manages candidate submissions, and handles billing and invoicing. A facility gets a single point of contact, one contract, and one invoice.

Working with the right managed services partner can help you fill jobs faster while reducing your administrative burden.
